

A.C. Frieden Researches Scenes in Munich

MUNICH, Germany (Dec. 9, 2012) – Novelist A.C. Frieden arrived in Munich, Germany to research an upcoming thriller. He spent part of his time in the Bavarian city hunting for suitable sites for a fictional police chase scene, a scene involving a clandestine dead drop, and back story scene about an intelligence operative working under diplomatic cover at the local U.S. Consulate. “For thriller authors, Munich has a wide range of interesting locales to weave into a story,” said Frieden while visiting one of the city’s downtown police stations, “and especially because of its post-war history.”

Frieden visited key sites in the historical downtown district, the neighborhoods of Schwanthalerhöhe and Altstadt-Lehel, the Englischer Garten (one of world’s largest urban public parks), and the famous Theresienwiese (site of the city’s annual Oktoberfest). In addition, Frieden also examined Cold War aircraft at the Oberschleissheim Aviation Museum, in the north suburbs of Munich (see separate press release).
